Regional NSW in the Spotlight

Which area has the least crime in NSW? How many children have been immunised? How many families use child care?

For the answers to these and hundreds of other fascinating questions about NSW turn to the Regional Statistics New South Wales 2000 publication, released tomorrow by the Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS).

The publication contains information down to local council level. New features this year include post-school qualifications and social indicators.

Old favourites brought together from a range of ABS sources include: area, population, births and deaths, building statistics, hotels and motels, local council financial data, labour force and educational attainment data, disability, health, crime, education and training and child care.

Media requiring copies of Regional Statistics New South Wales 2000 (cat. no. 1362.1) for reporting purposes should contact Jill Tomlinson (02) 9268 4123 to obtain a copy.
